Read the case study below and answer ALL the questions that follow.

Hamid is a refugee from Afghanistan who was recently released from the detention centre in PNG and is currently living in Cornubia. While walking in Cornubia Mall one day he was approached by Kathy who was selling internet access contracts for a newly formed internet company Speed Connect Pty Ltd. Hamid speaks very little English and Kathy is aware of this. Kathy explains the terms of the contract which is essentially that Hamid would be bound to a 2-year contract and if he breaks the contract any time before the 2 years he will incur a R5000 penalty. The contract comes with a free Samsung tablet. Kathy uses some technical language to explain the terms to Hamid, aware that he doesn't understand the full extent of the contract terms. There is a telephone translation service available but Kathy chooses not to use this as this translation service usually takes twice as long. Kathy works on a commission basis.

The more contracts she sells the more she earns. She wants to sign up this contract quickly as she is keen to sign up three more contract before close of business. Hamid has been thinking of getting internet connection as he wishes to Skype his family back home in Afghanistan and also to do a free on-line English course. He is under the impression that he can terminate this contract anytime he wants without any penalty and all he has to do is give Speed Connect one month's notice and return the tablet. Three months into the contract Hamid finds that he is unable to cope with the financial demands of this contract as there are many hidden costs which he was unaware. When he contacted Speed Connect to give his termination notice he was shocked to learn that there is a R5000 penalty.

Question One

(45 Marks)

Advise Hamid if this contract with Speed Connect is valid? Can he get out of this contract?

Question Two

(45 Marks)

Use the IRAC (Issue, Rule, Application & Conclusion) method to answer your question.
